TEXT A

Greeted with full military honours, traditional dances and huge crowds lining the streets, Pope Francis arrived in Mozambique Sept. 4 at the start of a weeklong trip to Africa. Mozambican President Filipe Nyusi and two children offering flowers welcomed Pope Francis as he stepped off the plane after a flight of just over 10 hours. The sun had already set as the pope's plane made its final approach. The official portion of the welcome ceremony was brief, and there were no speeches. But several groups of dancers and drummers began their numbers when the pope was walking to the popemobile, and women in the crowd began ululating, so he paused to watch and wave encouragement. Some of the dancers were dressed traditionally – grass skirts and leopard-print costumes predominated – but one group wore white T-shirts, white shorts and white tennis shoes. Young men played the "xigovia," a traditional woodwind instrument made from a gourd; its sound was similar to that of a kazoo. Thousands and thousands of people lined the streets from the airport to the apostolic nunciature where the pope was staying. Most stood in the dark unless they were at an intersection, which is where streetlights are more common. As is customary during the flight from Rome, he greeted members of the media travelling with him and thanked them for the work they would do over the next week as he visited Mozambique, Madagascar and Mauritius. "Let's hope this long trip bears fruit," he said. Francis also asked the reporters to keep in their prayers the people of the Bahamas and others in the path of Hurricane Dorian. Landing in Maputo after such a long flight, Francis was not scheduled to make his first speech until the next morning. In separate video messages aired in each of the three countries before the pope arrived, he gave a sense of his focus, which included an appreciation of the religious and cultural diversity present within each nation and praise for the strength and good works of the Catholic communities. In Mozambique, he said, he would pray for a consolidation of peace and reconciliation, a process that continues even though the civil war ended in 1992; after contested election results, violence broke out in 2013-14, and tensions continued until a new peace agreement was signed Aug. 1, just four weeks before the pope's arrival. The pope's video message to the people of Madagascar focused on the island's natural beauty and unique flora and fauna, but also on the poverty of its people and the relationship of that poverty to deforestation and other damage to the environment. In Mauritius, the religious and cultural diversity is especially marked: About 68 percent of the island's people have an Indian or Pakistani heritage; 27 percent are Creole; and 3 percent are of Chinese descent. About 28 percent of the population is Catholic. "The Catholic Church, from the beginning, was sent to all peoples and speaks all the languages of the world," the pope said in his message to the Mauritians. "But, you know, the language of the Gospel is love. May the Lord, through the intercession of the Virgin Mary, allow me to proclaim the Gospel with the strength of the Holy Spirit so that all may understand and accept it."

TEXT 2

British Airways apologized today for an error that left passengers on board a flight from Miami to London in a state of panic and shock. Passengers traveling on British Airways Flight 206 were about three hours into their flight early Friday morning when an announcement warned them to brace themselves for an emergency water landing because the plane was about to go down. "This is an emergency. We will shortly be making an emergency landing on water," the taped message said, played at around 3 a.m. on the overnight flight. The cabin erupted in panic as startled passengers woke to the announcement and feared for their lives. "My wife was crying and passengers were screaming," a passenger from Scotland told The Telegraph. "I thought we were going to die."

The crew played a second announcement a minute later, however, telling passengers to ignore the warning. In reality, the plane was cruising safely at an altitude of 35,000 feet and halfway from Miami to London's Heathrow Airport at the time.

The flight continued safely to London, where the disembarking passengers were met by British Airways representatives handing out letters apologizing for the error.

The airline blamed the scare on a pre-recorded emergency announcement that was activated in error, according to the Daily Mail. It was unclear whether the announcement resulted from human error, or a computer malfunction.

"The cabin crew canceled the announcement immediately and sought to reassure customers that the flight was operating normally. We apologize to customers for causing them undue concern," the company said in a statement.

The incident is the second time in two years that an emergency warning has mistakenly gone off on a British Airways flight. In August 2010, 275 passengers on board a British Airways flight from London to Hong Kong were jarred by a similar message announcing, "We may shortly need to make an emergency landing on water." In that case, again, crew members quickly issued another message saying the warning was an error, and the airline later issued a statement of apology.
